

To the Next Generation

Dear Future Steward,

One day, responsibility will quietly become yours.

Not because you asked for it.

But because someone trusted you with what they spent a lifetime building.

Inheritance is often misunderstood.

It is not merely the transfer of assets.

It is the transfer of expectations.

Of sacrifice.

Of values.

The greatest inheritance is not wealth itself.

It is the judgment to use it wisely.

Do not feel pressured to imitate the previous generation.

Instead, seek to understand the principles that guided them.

Respect tradition.

Embrace innovation.

Remain curious.

Continue learning.

Remember that preserving wealth requires as much character as creating it.

Your responsibility is not simply to receive.

It is to improve.

The next chapter of your family's story begins with the decisions you make today.

Write it thoughtfully.
